Jacob saw two squadrons of these invisible telegraph. foress, which are on the side of righteons men. "The angels of God met him," and pared, and the officer in charge readily he said, "This is God's host; and he called consented to operate on the paralyzed the name of thet place Mahanaim (two campe);" for there's double army of angels tremity of each wire a damped sponge.

We know that a guard of angels always surrounds every believer. Ministering spirits Timidly complying, he was astonished to are abroad, protesting the princes of the feel no sensation. blood royal. They cannot be discerned by any of our senses, but they are perceptible by faith, and they have been made perceptble to holy men if old in vision. These bands of angels as great in multitude ; for lous laughter of the officials. Jacob said, "This is God's host !" a host means a considerable number, and surely the shock the nobleman had received the host of God is tot 4 small one, "The Though it effected a partial cure the chariots of God an twenty thousand, even thousands of anyles." We do not know what legions wait apon the Lord, only we read of "an innumerable company of angels." We look abroad in the world, and calculate the number of persons and forces friendly to our Christian waifare; but these are only what our poor optics can discover; the half cannot be told us by such means. It may be that every star is a world, thronged with the servants of God, who are willing and ready to dart like flames of fire upon Jehowah's errands of love. If the Lord's chosen his hand on the other terminal. A sudden could not be sufficiently protected by the yell and a backward jump were the result. forces available in one world, he has but to speak or will, and myriads of spirits from the far-off regions of space would come genii of the machine. The Englishman atthronging forward to guard the children of tempted to explain the operation, but his their king. As the stars of the sky, countless in their armies, are the invisible warriors of God. "His camp is very great." Omnipotence her servants everywhery. eth among them all, they run like mighty man requiring legal assistance had been men, they prevel as men of war. A host is made up of valiant men, veterans, troopers, heroes, men fit for conflict. God's forces are exceedingly strong : nothing can stand against them. Whatever form they take, they are always potent, even when God's host is made up of grasshoppers., cankerworms, and palmerworms, as in the Book of Joel, none can resist them, and nothing can escape them. They devoured everything; they covered the earth; and even darkened the sun and moon. If such be the case with insects, what must be the power of angels. We know that they "excel in strength." as they "do his commandments.

Perhaps in the early morning, as he rose to tend his flocks. he saw the skies peopled with shining ones who quite eclipsed the dawn. The heavens were vivid with decending lustres, and the angels came upon him as a bright cloud descending, as it were, upon the patriarch. They glided downward from those gates of pearl, more famed than the gates of Thebes, They divided to the right and to the left and became two hosts. Perhaps the one band pitched their camps behind, as much as to say, "All is right in the rear, Laban cannot return; better than the cairn of Mazpeh is the bost of God." Another, squadron moved to the front, as much as to say, "Peace, band, she changed her dress for that of a patriarch, peace in regard to Esau, the red man, procured employment in a factory, hunter, and his armed men: we guard you and worked there for years, undiscovered in the van." "Wait a moment," said the Englishr clapping the other sponge on the man's shoulder. With a leap and a yell, he bounded out of the room, smid the uproar-

All Shiras was excited, the next day, a frightened man refused to submit to a second application of the "invisible fire." One shock was sufficient, for he declared all the stars of the heavens were visible to him in that swful moment.

He would visit the telegraph office and look with awe at the "fire" machines. Mournfully shaking his head, he would depart without uttering a word.

Another Persian whose curiosity con quered his fear, while examining the telegraph, touched one of the terminals of the machine. As he felt no sensation, he laid The man told his companions, in an avestruck tone, that he had been bitten by the words did not disturb in the least the Persian's credulity.
